Interested in a career in scientific publishing?

... we are offering a

One-Year Editorial Internship(f/m) in the Editorial Office of the European Journal of Immunology

We offer extensive training in scientific publishing in an attractive working environment. The candidate will gain on-the-job experience in many different aspects associated with the production of top-ranking science journals, such as managing the scientific peer-review process, editing and preparing manuscripts for production, writing scientific news, development of journal content, coordination of freelance work as well as compiling marketing materials. Your primary focus will be the European Journal of Immunology, playing an active role in the day-to-day challenges and responsibilities associated with managing and producing this high-quality primary research journal.

The training period is 12 months, after which adoption into a permanent position may be possible. You will receive focused, on-the job editorial training from experienced staff and will also be made familiar with the related areas of publishing, including production, marketing and finance.

Applicants should be self-motivated, innovative, have the desire to contribute to the further development of products within the life science department, and a strong commitment to the communication of science. We are looking for candidates with a background, preferably a PhD, in immunology or a closely related field with good scientific judgement and an excellent command of the English language. In addition, applicants must possess excellent organizational, interpersonal, communication (written and spoken) and computer skills, and be able to work in a team and independently. Accuracy and a keen eye for detail are also essential as well as the ability to work under pressure and to handle high workloads whilst maintaining best standards. Previous publishing experience is not required.

The position is based in our office in Weinheim, Germany. We offer competitive financial and career rewards, training and career development.

Applicants should send a CV, together with a covering letter describing career goals and your interest in the post to:
